Cotton Shirt Ends Laundry Woes.

Both boys can play on the floor, and no one worries about the laundry, thanks to the new all-cotton wash-and-wear shirt introduced by Arrow. These shirts combine the comfort and sturdy good looks of cotton with the convenience of wash-and-wear. New pliable permanent stays keep collars neatly in place.

There's good news from the menswear designers this fall with the introduction of a new all-cotton wash-and-wear shirt.

This new shirt, which should be welcomed by students, travelers, and ladies on the soapsuds detail, is made of 100 per cent cotton. It has the drip-dry, no-iron convenience, with the friendly and familiar all-cotton feel. Even though it requires no bleaching it will retain the dazzling whiteness characteristic of cotton for the life of the garment. This is an important point for men who take pride in wearing a shirt that remains absolutely and uncompromisingly white.

The new all-cotton shirts are "Sanforized" for permanent fit, and will retain their wash-and-wear properties indefinitely, as long as they are laundered according to directions.

The makers of Arrow shirts recommend that the all-cotton shirts be washed exclusively by hand, using mild soapsuds. Bleaching and hard scrubbing will be unnecessary, since the new process used by Cluett, Peabody, prevents soil from penetrating the fibers. After washing, hang dripping wet on a hanger over the bathtub. Do not squeeze or wring, since this will produce wrinkles that may need ironing. Pull seams to eliminate puckers smooth collars and cuffs, and 'finger-press' the front facing. After it is dry, it will be ready to wear. In most cases, no ironing will be necessary.

The all-cotton wash-and-wear shirt is available in a complete men's and boy's size range.
